

COMPLETE NARRATIVE EDITION

Print and separate before play.

This complete edition contains 52 PDF pages. The ranges below are physical PDF positions, not the archive folios retained within the case.

Player packet: PDF positions 3-38 (36 pages).

Optional hints: PDF positions 39-43 (5 pages).

Sealed solution: PDF positions 45-52 (8 pages).

For the simplest setup, print the separate Player, Hints, and Sealed Solution PDFs. If using this file, separate the protected sections using these ranges before distributing the player packet. The sections start on fresh duplex sheets.

Print US Letter at 100%, or A4 with Fit; grayscale is sufficient. Read the player instructions for the archive folios, story leaves, and investigation. All characters and records are fictional.

PRINT SETUP

The player file begins next.

Keep the hints and solution separate before anyone starts reading. This reverse protects the first player sheet when printing duplex.

Baby in a Basket

A name to find. A family to reconstruct.

READ FIRST

Read the people. Test the papers.

Print the Player PDF in full. This edition contains 36 pages, including its cover and interleaved story. Use US Letter, portrait, actual size / 100%; on A4, use Fit. Grayscale is sufficient. Single-sided lets you spread the records out; duplex uses the long edge. Keep the separate hints and sealed solution away from the player stack.

Follow the printed archive folios. Existing page references mean the numbers labeled ARCHIVE in the footers, which remain stable. New story leaves use S0-S3. They make the PDF positions different from the archive numbers. Use the bookmarks or clickable catalog to find a page on screen.

Begin with the opening scene and brief. Read BB01-BB03 and choose your next record through archive folios 8-9. Each later scene names the records to read first. In a nonlinear search, return to that scene after you have examined its records; scene order does not prove a connection.

Let the records carry the proof. The new scenes dramatize the people around these papers. They are fictional narrative, not additional archival exhibits. A character can be mistaken. Names, dates, parents, addresses, source references, and the supplied rules establish the case; sympathy does not.

Make your case. Use archive folios 27-32. Cite exhibit codes and exact fields, test alternatives, and leave unsupported matters open. Everyone investigates; no host, internet, cutting, or outside research is required. Use hints only when needed; open the solution after answering all final questions.

The four birth identities are the complete candidate set. The sealed letter supplies private confirmation only after you commit.

THE STORY CONTINUES

The question before the wedding

Before the opening brief / Mabel's family story

Edith had always been able to tell the story of the basket. The church, the little girl, the home waiting for her. When Mabel was small, the telling ended with Edith drawing her close. It was a good ending for a child who wanted to be certain she belonged.

As a grown woman preparing to enter her name in another register, Mabel discovered that the same ending could close a door.

"What am I to put?" she asked.

Edith looked at the paper. "Sutton. You've always been Sutton."

"I know my name. I mean before."

Thomas kept his eyes on the table. He could repair a thing with a split in it. He could not make this question fit neatly beside the life they had given her.

Edith reached to straighten Mabel's sleeve. Mabel let her. She loved that hand. She also wanted it to stop answering questions nobody had asked.

"We don't have those names," Edith said.

"Then I want to look."

For a moment Edith's face made Mabel feel as though she had announced she was leaving them. The unfairness of that feeling brought heat to her eyes. She had not wanted an argument. She had wanted permission not to know something and still need to know it.

"Was there something you lacked here?" Edith asked.

Thomas moved then, drawing a chair out so Mabel could sit. "She asked about the papers."

Edith looked at him, hurt. He did not withdraw the chair.

Mabel sat. "I can be grateful and ask. Can't I?"

The answer took long enough to matter.

Edith put her hand flat on the table. "Yes."

They had no account of the person who carried the basket. The old newspaper did not provide one. Thomas and Edith could tell Mabel how she had come into their care, but their love did not turn that knowledge into a birth record.

Mabel drew the clipping toward her. For the first time she read the estimate of the infant's age as something a doctor had tried to judge, not as the beginning of a story she had to accept whole.

She wanted a name. She was afraid of the reason it had been taken away. Across the table, Edith was afraid that finding it would make Sutton seem smaller. Neither fear could choose the answer. Somewhere in the county's ordinary papers, other children had been entered under other parents' names.

The story she was given

The Sutton family papers

Mabel Ruth Sutton grew up knowing where her family story began: a basket, a church pew, and the couple who took her home.

Thomas and Edith Sutton raised her as their daughter. The name Sutton stayed with her into adulthood. But the story of the basket never supplied the names of the people who had come before them.

Now the papers are in front of you. A household schedule. A newspaper clipping. A marriage entry. Beyond those, the local archive holds birth and death registers and records of other families in the same county.

Name in the starting papers	What you have been told
Mabel Ruth Sutton	The child found in a basket; later raised as the Suttons' daughter.
Thomas Sutton	The man who raised Mabel; a carpenter.
Edith Sutton	The woman who raised Mabel.
Lydia Mercer	Edith's mother; also in the Sutton household.

Your question: Who was Mabel Ruth Sutton before she became the Suttons' daughter, and what family circumstances best explain her arrival at the church?

This is a closed case: the correct birth identity is among the four infant entries in the archive index. The records contain enough evidence to choose the best-supported identity. Private actions may remain uncertain until the sealed family paper is opened.

How to read these papers

A few conventions; no outside research needed.

A HOUSEHOLD IS A SNAPSHOT

A census records people living together on a particular date. A relationship such as daughter, niece, or boarder is the relationship entered in that record. It is evidence to compare, not an automatic guarantee of biological parentage.

DATES MEAN DIFFERENT THINGS

A newspaper publication date is not necessarily the event date. A birth month in an index is less precise than a birth date in a register. Put the actual event dates on your timeline.

MOTHER OF HOW MANY CHILDREN

The census fields for children born and children living refer to children borne by the woman whose row is being recorded. They do not count every child living in her household. A zero is an entry; a dash in these extracts means the field was not copied.

AGES CAN BE IMPERFECT

In these census extracts, 4/12 means four months. An estimated age is a search aid, not an exact birthday. Small disagreements can occur; compare the full name, dates, household, and other records.

AN ABSENCE IS A QUESTION

Someone missing from a later household may have married, moved, entered service, died, or been omitted from an extract. Use a positive record to explain an absence whenever possible.

RECORD WHAT YOU CAN SUPPORT

Write down what a paper says separately from what you think it means. Your final answer should distinguish a supported identity from a private act no public witness has identified.

All people and individual case records are fictional. The exhibits are newly designed period-style facsimiles with selected fields, not authentic archival scans. Handwriting, typefaces, paper wear, punctuation, and page order are not hidden clues.

THE WARREN COUNTY CHRONICLE

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE

INFANT FOUND AT GRACE CHURCH

A female infant was found yesterday morning, September 30, in a basket in a rear pew at Grace Church, before the Sunday services.

The discovery was made by Henry Caldwell, sexton of the church. The name of the person who brought the basket has not been established.

Dr. Samuel Price examined the child and considered her to be about seven months of age and in good health.

The child's parentage was not known at the time of this report.

Local newspaper clipping. The publication title is fictional. No birth surname is supplied in the report.

Bride's entry

Marriage register / 12 June 1919 / Warren County, Ohio

EXTRACT OF FIELDS RELATING TO THE BRIDE

MARRIAGE SOLEMNIZED 12 JUNE 1919

Name entered: Mabel Ruth Sutton

Age: 19

Residence: Warren County, Ohio

Parents who raised her: Thomas Sutton and Edith Sutton

Biological parentage: Not known to the bride.

Mabel Ruth Sutton

Bride's name as entered. This extract reproduces only the bride-related information; the spouse's entry is outside the supplied case.

The register gives the identity Mabel used as an adult. It does not supply a birth surname or a biological parent's name.

THE STORY CONTINUES

What a zero can wound

After BB01-BB03

After the wedding, Mabel brought the marriage extract back to the table with the older papers. Edith's eyes stopped at the census fields. Children born: zero. Children living: zero.

"That isn't what my life was," she said.

Mabel understood the protest before she understood the column. She could supply ten years of contradiction: being dressed, fed, scolded, waited for. She wanted to cross out the zero as fiercely as Edith did.

Then she read the heading again. The count belonged to a particular question. The form had not attempted to measure every kind of motherhood.

"It doesn't say you didn't raise me."

"It looks as if I had no one."

Mabel turned the schedule so they could both see her own line. Daughter. There she was, inside the household and beside the entry that made her ask how she had entered it.

Thomas stood behind Edith's chair. He did not correct either of them. Mabel thought of all the times he had made room for her without making a speech about it. She wanted the investigation to leave that part of their life intact. Wanting was not a method of reading a record.

The marriage extract gave the parents who had raised her. It also left biological parentage unknown. Neither paper erased the other; each had asked for something different.

Edith touched the clipping. "They said she was in good health. I remember being glad of that."

Mabel noticed the change of pronoun. She, the infant. A small person who had existed before Edith could say my daughter. It made the distance visible without explaining it.

"I don't want to lose this family," Mabel said. "I'm trying to find what happened to the other one."

Edith took her hand away from the paper. There was no grand promise in the gesture. She simply stopped holding down the page Mabel wanted to turn.

The entries would need comparison. A census could be mistaken; an adult name could preserve a childhood story without identifying its beginning. The papers offered routes into the question, not a reason to stop loving anyone already in the room.

THE STORY CONTINUES

Four small lives

After BB04-BB09

Mabel copied the four girls' names onto separate lines. At first the task felt almost shameful, as though she were trying on other people's childhoods to see which would fit.

Ruth. Nora. Elsie. Mabel.

Thomas watched her compare the households. "Does one look right?"

"Looking right isn't enough."

She had wanted to answer differently. A familiar given name could feel like recognition before it proved anything. A mother's death could make a terrible story seem complete before she had followed the child beyond it.

Edith read the death entries. "There were three of them."

Three women reduced here to the selected fields of a county register. The extracts did not give a cause. They did not say who put the next meal on the table, who took over the smallest child's washing, or whether the husband accepted help. Those missing scenes pressed into Mabel's mind because she was looking for her own. She had to resist writing them into the evidence.

"A man loses his wife," Thomas began, then stopped.

"And a child loses her mother," Mabel said.

He nodded. "Yes."

Neither sentence settled what happened afterward. Even grief did not make every household do the same thing. The archive held later records. Those children had lives beyond the moment at which this investigation first needed them.

Mabel put the full birth entries beside the index instead of discarding the names that seemed less likely. She wrote event dates separately from dates on newspaper headings. It was slow work, and for once slowness felt like respect.

Edith brought another chair close enough to read over her shoulder. She asked which paper Mabel wanted next. The question was so ordinary that Mabel nearly missed what had changed: her mother was no longer asking why she wanted another paper at all.

They would follow each child as far as the supplied records allowed. Nobody would be chosen merely because her losses made the most affecting explanation.

Church care book

Grace Church / Monday, 1 October 1900

ENTRY CONCERNING THE INFANT FOUND ON SEPTEMBER 30

The female infant found yesterday in the rear pew has this day been received into the care of Thomas and Edith Sutton.

Mr. Sutton is a carpenter of this county. The child is to be taken into their home.

The names of the child's parents remain unknown.

An informal care entry. It is not a court adoption decree and does not identify the person who brought the basket.

THE STORY CONTINUES

A household is not a whole life

After BB10-BB20

The later households would not fit on the same sheet as the earlier ones. Mabel took another page. Thomas offered a larger piece of paper, then waited to see whether she wanted it before clearing the table.

Boarder. Niece. Daughter. Granddaughter.

Each word put someone in relation to the person named at the head of the household. None said whether she liked the room, whether he wrote home, or what it felt like to leave. Mabel could trace the recorded connections without pretending she had recovered all those answers.

"They might have been well cared for," Edith said.

Mabel looked up sharply. "They might have missed someone anyway."

Edith drew a breath. "I know."

Mabel had expected an argument. The absence of one made her hear how much Edith was allowing the sentence to include.

Thomas rested his hands on the back of his chair. He wanted the papers to deliver a person he could blame or thank. Mabel could see the impatience in him because she felt it herself. Somebody had carried a basket. Somebody had walked away. It was easier to picture a face than to accept that the public account did not supply one.

The church care entry was plain about the next day. Thomas and Edith had received the infant into their home. The entry did not turn backward and identify the person from the morning before.

Mabel read it aloud. Her voice was steady until she reached their names.

"We wanted you," Edith said.

"I believe you."

She did not add that this answered everything. Edith did not ask her to.

Mabel made two headings on the work sheet: what the records establish, and what they leave open. Beneath the second she left room. Uncertainty was not the same as having no family. It was a part of this family story that nobody at the table had earned the right to fill by guesswork.

The names still had to be connected, the alternatives tested, the dates counted. After that, there would remain another question: whether understanding a separation would make it feel any less like being left.

Compare the infant identities

Keep a candidate until a record gives you a reason to set her aside.

Start with BB04. Record ages as evidence, not hard cutoffs. Look for a later record for each candidate and compare the date of any family loss with the date of the basket.

A good reconstruction includes the limits of its evidence.

04 / THE HOUSEHOLD PATTERN

How many children were in the earlier birth household? Trace at least three into later households, naming the household and the recorded relationship. What does the pattern support?

05 / THE ALTERNATIVES

For each of the other three infant candidates, cite the later record that supports setting her aside. Explain why an age match or a mother's death is not enough.

06 / THE EXPLANATION AND ITS LIMIT

What circumstances best explain Mabel's arrival at the church? Before the sealed letter, can you identify who physically left the basket? Separate inference from fact.

THE THREE STRONGEST RECORDS

ONE UNCERTAINTY THE PAPERS DO NOT RESOLVE

When you are satisfied with your explanation, open the sealed solution at page 37 or use the separate Sealed Solution PDF. Read the answer key before the private letter. The investigation is complete when you can explain your reasoning, not merely name a family.

OPTIONAL HELP

Use one hint at a time.

Return to the records as soon as a hint gives you a next step. The original hint levels and exhibit references remain unchanged in this edition.

If a scene has made you certain about somebody, ask which record supports that certainty. Caring about a person, distrusting them, or finding their explanation plausible is not a substitute for a link in the evidence.

The story can leave a motive complicated while the record answers a factual question. You are allowed to reach a firm identification and still disagree about the person involved.

The following pages retain their original hint folios. Read progressively. Keep the separate sealed solution closed until you have committed your answer.

Optional hints

Open only when you want a nudge.

The next three pages give progressively more specific help. You can solve the case without using them.

PAGE 34 / A DIRECTION

Questions that help you choose a useful next step.

PAGE 35 / A RECORD TO OPEN

Specific record combinations for common sticking points.

PAGE 36 / A STRONGER NUDGE

Direct comparisons that nearly resolve the investigation.

Start with page 34. If one hint unsticks you, return to the papers before reading farther. Cover the lower part of a hint page with a blank sheet if you want to reveal one item at a time.

A direction

Read only as far as you need.

THE FIRST HOUSEHOLD

Read both Mabel's relationship and Edith's childbearing fields. Does the word daughter tell you everything you need?

THE CLIPPING

Separate the day the newspaper appeared from the day the child was found. Work backward from the physician's approximate age.

THE CANDIDATES

Use the birth index to build a short list. A familiar first name may attract attention, but it cannot finish the investigation.

THE FAMILY CHANGE

Compare a household before the basket with households afterward. If a child disappears from one home, search for a positive entry somewhere else.

THE FINAL EXPLANATION

You can have a well-supported identity without knowing who carried the basket. Do not turn an unnamed person in a newspaper report into a named witness.

A record to open

These combinations are more specific.

LINK THE SUTTONS TO THE CHURCH

Compare BB01, BB02, and BB20. The care book connects the found infant to the Sutton home without naming her birth family.

FIX THE BIRTH SEARCH

BB02 reports about seven months on September 30, 1900. Look through BB04 and then BB18. The estimate is not an exact cutoff; keep all four candidates in play until you trace them.

LOOK FOR A CRISIS

BB09 contains three mothers' death entries. Which death falls immediately before September 30? Which falls after it? Do not stop with the dates: test the children's later whereabouts.

TRACE A SURNAME ACROSS HOUSEHOLDS

Put BB07 beside BB10, BB11, BB12, and BB14. Copy the names before interpreting the labels. BB19 helps you investigate one connection through the maiden name Flynn.

FINISH THE OTHER SEARCHES

For Elsie Miller open BB15. For Nora Keane open BB16. For Ruth Foster open BB17. Compare each record with the corresponding 1900 household.

A stronger nudge

Return to the evidence after each comparison.

THE FAMILY TO EXAMINE

BB07 has ten children, including an infant girl born in February 1900. BB18 gives her exact birthday and her parents' names.

THE EIGHT-DAY INTERVAL

Compare Nora Reilly's death on September 22 with the finding on September 30. The household loses its mother immediately before the basket appears.

NAMES IN OTHER HOMES

John Reilly is in the Walsh household; Margaret in the Doyle household; Thomas in the Bennett household; Rose in the O'Brien household. Compare their names and ages with BB07.

WHY THE ALTERNATIVES WEAKEN

Elsie is positively recorded as Rebecca Hale's granddaughter in 1910. Nora remains in the Keane household. Ruth is named with Samuel Foster in the Indiana departure notice. None needs to become Mabel Sutton to explain her later record.

WHAT TO SUBMIT

Name the February-born infant in the ten-child household. Explain the converging age, death, and dispersal evidence. Leave the identity of the person who brought the basket unconfirmed until the sealed family paper.

SEALED SOLUTION

Stop here until you commit.

This file reveals the investigation, the identities, and the ending. Keep it separate from the player packet.

Before continuing, write your conclusion, cite the records that support it, and name an uncertainty the file does not resolve.

Read the evidence-cited solution first. The expanded aftermath follows the original ending. It develops the human consequences; it does not supply a clue needed to solve the case.

A blank reverse follows this cover so the first answer starts on a fresh sheet when this file is printed on both sides.

The answer is overleaf.

Keep this file closed until your written reconstruction is complete.

The name before Sutton

Read this before the private letter.

01 / THE STARTING CONTRADICTION

BB01 calls Mabel the Suttons' daughter, while Edith reports no children born and none living. The census alone could contain an error; it also does not settle Thomas's biological relationship. BB02 supplies the foundling account and BB20 explicitly places that found infant with Thomas and Edith. Together they make the Sutton household a caregiving identity to investigate, rather than a sufficient birth identity.

02 / THE BIRTH IDENTITY

Mabel Reilly, born 11 February 1900, daughter of Patrick Reilly and Nora Flynn Reilly. BB18 records that birth directly. BB07 puts infant Mabel in their household in June 1900. BB02's estimated age, BB09's maternal death, the later household pattern, and the alternate candidates' continued identities support the match. The birth entry establishes who Mabel Reilly was; it is the combined case that identifies her with Mabel Sutton.

03 / THE TURNING POINT

Nora died on 22 September 1900. The infant was found on 30 September 1900: eight days later. Use BB09 and BB02. October 1 is the newspaper publication date and the day the Suttons take the infant home in BB20, not the day the basket was found.

For full credit: explain the opening contradiction without treating one census field as infallible; give the original name, birthday, and both parents; calculate the interval from the event dates.

The family behind the name

A pattern across records, with limits kept visible.

04 / THE HOUSEHOLD PATTERN

BB07 shows ten children with Patrick and Nora, twelve household members in all. At least three of these later matches satisfy the deduction:

Child	Later household	Recorded role	Source
John Reilly	Walsh	Boarder; hired hand	BB14
Margaret Reilly	Doyle	Niece	BB11
Thomas Reilly	Bennett	Boarder	BB10
Rose Reilly	O'Brien	Niece	BB12

The pattern supports a family dispersed into several households. A ten-year gap and adult children leaving home do not, by themselves, prove exact placement dates or motives. The pattern gains weight when combined with Nora's death, the infant's disappearance from the supplied Reilly trail, and the foundling account.

05 / THE ALTERNATIVES

Elsie Miller: BB15 records her with Rebecca Hale in 1910. Nora Keane: BB16 records her with William and Anna. Ruth Foster: BB17 records her departure with Samuel in May 1901. These positive records support continued identities separate from Mabel Sutton within this closed case. Ruth's mother also died before the finding; that coincidence is insufficient. Sarah Miller's death was after the basket appeared.

06 / THE EXPLANATION AND ITS LIMIT

A mother's death left a large household in crisis; the scattered children make a care-related separation the best-supported explanation. The public papers do not identify who carried the basket. Naming Patrick at this stage is a hypothesis, not an established observation. The private letter confirms that act.

Ten children. One household.

Patrick Reilly and Nora Flynn Reilly

Patrick and Nora married on 3 June 1878. Their ten children appear together in the June 1900 household. These are the original names and canonical birth dates:

Child	Date of birth	What the play packet establishes
Daniel Reilly	14 January 1879	Later whereabouts not established in the play packet.
Kathleen Reilly	9 June 1881	Later whereabouts not established in the play packet.
Michael Reilly	25 March 1883	Named with Patrick in 1910 / BB13.
Ellen Reilly	16 November 1885	Named with Patrick in 1910 / BB13.
John Reilly	4 July 1887	Walsh household / BB14.
Margaret Reilly	30 September 1889	Doyle household / BB11.
Thomas Reilly	8 December 1891	Bennett household / BB10.
Rose Reilly	17 May 1894	O'Brien household / BB12.
Joseph Reilly	21 August 1897	Later whereabouts not established in the play packet.
Mabel Reilly	11 February 1900	Raised as Mabel Ruth Sutton / case conclusion.

The exact birthdays of the older children are supplied here as family reconstruction, not as clues the player was expected to recover. An untraced person was never meant to be counted as dead.

Mary Flynn Doyle is Nora's younger sister, so Margaret is genuinely Mary's niece. Rose's recorded niece label in the O'Brien household is imprecise: Agnes is not her aunt. Ellen's age of 15 in BB07 also differs from her birth date. Neither discrepancy overturns the wider identity case.

A letter never sent

3 March 1942 / Ohio / retained among family papers

Dear Mabel,

I have written your name at the top of this page and then sat here, wondering which name belongs after it. Sutton is the name you grew up with. Reilly was the name you were born with. You were our baby sister.

Father was Patrick Reilly. Mother was Nora Flynn before she married him. You were born on February 11, 1900, the youngest of ten. My name is Margaret. I was eleven when we lost you from the house.

Mother died on September 22. After that Father could not keep the farm going and care for all of us together. I went to Aunt Mary Doyle. John went to the Walshes, Thomas to the Bennetts, and Rose to the O'Briens. A family can still have all its names and no longer have one home.

Father was the one who left you at Grace Church on September 30. He put you in the basket in a rear pew before the Sunday service. No one there knew whose child you were. Thomas and Edith Sutton took you home the next day.

I do not know how to make an explanation answer for all the years. I can only write the thing that was left out of the story you were given. You had a mother. You had a father. You had nine brothers and sisters. We did not stop being your family because you did not know our names.

I have kept this letter instead of sending it. Perhaps that is another failure to add to the first. But I want the words somewhere outside my own head: you were Mabel Reilly, and you were my sister.

Margaret

D009 / sealed confirmation. This letter is a fictional rendering of the supplied canonical account.

What the letter settles

The finding was a beginning, not the whole family story.

Mabel Ruth Sutton was Mabel Reilly. Margaret's letter confirms the identity and names Patrick as the person who left her at the church. It supplies the private family explanation that the public records could only support indirectly.

The child in the basket was the youngest of ten. Nora's death broke the household apart. The Suttons gave Mabel a home and the name she carried into adulthood; the investigation restores the names of the family she had not known.

WHAT COUNTED AS SOLVING THE CASE

You identified the birth family, supported the match with several records, reconstructed the household pattern, and tested the alternatives. You also recognized where the evidence stopped. The letter rewards that work; it does not replace it.

ABOUT THE RECORDS

The story, 44 canonical people, parentage, major dates, and family placements come from the supplied Baby in a Basket master handoff. The newspaper wording, letter prose, care-book rendering, and page designs were created for this edition. None of the exhibits is an authentic historical record. Unknown spouses, death causes, and untraced later residences were not invented.

Mabel's 1900 census entry retains the handoff's recorded 4/12. Her canonical birthday makes her three completed months old on June 1; the recorded figure is approximate, not a different birthday. The Sutton home placement follows the locked story and event record: October 1, 1900.

AFTER THE CASE

The letter stayed in the drawer

After the sealed letter and answer key

Margaret wrote her sister's name and held the pen above the next line. In 1942, there were words for the family relationship that had been missing from Mabel's own account. There was no sentence that could give the years back.

She wrote Patrick. Nora. The birthday. The ten children. The names were plain enough when set down separately. What had been difficult was making them live in the same letter as what Father had done.

At eleven, she had not been the adult responsible for keeping the household together. Remembering that did not stop her from revisiting the house as if there were an overlooked task she might still complete. Carry something. Fetch someone. Speak before the basket was gone. The mind could keep giving a child duties the child had never possessed the power to carry out.

She did not write a scene she had not witnessed. She wrote the account preserved in the letter: Father had left Mabel at Grace Church. The public records could support the family crisis; this private paper finally named the person who carried out that act.

To explain it was to risk sounding as if she excused it. To give no explanation was to make the family seem incapable of love. She wanted a third way and could not find a sentence that guaranteed how her sister would hear it.

She left the admission about keeping the letter. Perhaps that was another failure. It was the least comfortable line and the one she did not cross out.

When the page was finished, she laid the pen down. The letter remained unsent. What Mabel would have made of it was a question the page could not answer.

What you have recovered is therefore uneven. The identity is strong within the closed case: Mabel Reilly, daughter of Patrick and Nora, later Mabel Ruth Sutton. The private letter confirms Patrick's act. Some siblings can be traced in the supplied households; others remain untraced. The record of a mother raising no biological children does not diminish the home Edith made. The record of a father in crisis does not make the child's loss disappear.

Margaret could put a name on what happened. She could not control what that name would mean to Mabel. The final unfinished business was no longer a missing field in a register. It was the distance between telling a truth somewhere on paper and telling it to the person who had spent a life without it.
