IF I WERE KING

A genealogy mystery

One letter. An impossible inheritance.

THE STORY CONTINUES

The unused cup

Before the opening brief

Daniel Wren put out two cups before remembering that he needed one. He left the second on the table. Taking it back to the shelf had become a small correction he could not always bear to make.

The letter from Veyr occupied Margaret's place.

He had read his own name in it several times. Daniel Wren, retired railway clerk. A man whose days had become quiet enough that the arrival of any post gave them a shape. The letter described a place in a succession. It did not offer the simple explanation for his life that he found himself wanting from it.

When Orme presented his declaration, Daniel listened longer than he might have listened to another man. Orme spoke as though there were still important tasks for him to perform, and as though experience at a railway desk might prepare him to do them well.

"You are accustomed to responsibility," Orme said.

Daniel looked at the two cups. "Some kinds."

Orme did not ask about the second. He put the paper where Daniel could sign it.

There was comfort in being given a line to complete. Daniel had spent a working life understanding which forms had to precede which decisions. The private declaration looked like another gate a sensible man should pass through without making trouble.

He reached for the pen, then drew the official letter nearer instead. Its warning about agents and authority was less flattering than Orme's account of him. It also had a seal and a reference he could check.

"I should like to read the earlier papers."

"Of course. There is the deadline to consider."

Daniel felt the pressure at once: asking to understand could be made to sound like refusing to act. He had not expected the possibility of a crown to resemble an awkward afternoon over a form.

"Then I ought to begin reading," he said.

Orme waited. Daniel had to resist filling the silence with an apology.

The second cup remained on the table after the papers were opened. Daniel could not ask Margaret whether the news would have amused or troubled her. He could look at the records of both families and refuse, for the moment, to let a stranger decide which of them mattered.

The letter calls him an heir.

Elmsreach, Massachusetts, and the fictional Kingdom of Veyr / April 1928

Since Margaret died, Daniel Wren has kept two cups on the kitchen shelf and used only one. He is sixty-two, a retired railway clerk, and has never been to Veyr. Until last week, he had scarcely heard of it.

Now a letter bearing the kingdom's seal says he is second in line for its vacant throne. A private representative has attached a declaration for his signature. Daniel wants someone to examine the papers before he answers.

He gives you the royal dossier and an old family box. The story they tell must be reconstructed: what makes his claim possible, who comes before him, and what the declaration would actually assert.

Your commission: Verify the notice, reconstruct the two relevant family branches, identify the first heir, rank Daniel correctly, and advise whether the attached declaration is supported by the evidence.

Start: Read K01, K02 and K03. Then use the archive catalog to choose a record that could answer your next question.

Case boundaries: Veyr, its monarchy, settlement and institutions are invented. Apply K03 exactly; no external succession law is needed. K18 defines the independently checked limits of this case. There are no hidden living branches, secret amendments or unprovided renunciations.

Complete your final report on page 25 before opening the separate solution. All people, places, institutions and records are fictional. Evidence pages are readable typeset facsimiles or selected-field transcriptions, not authentic scans.

READ FIRST

Read the people. Test the papers.

Print the Player PDF in full. This edition contains 29 pages, including its cover and interleaved story. Use US Letter, portrait, actual size / 100%; on A4, use Fit. Grayscale is sufficient. Single-sided lets you spread the records out; duplex uses the long edge. Keep the separate hints and sealed solution away from the player stack.

Follow the printed archive folios. Existing page references mean the numbers labeled ARCHIVE in the footers, which remain stable. New story leaves use S0-S3. They make the PDF positions different from the archive numbers. Use the bookmarks or clickable catalog to find a page on screen.

Begin with the opening scene and brief. Read K01-K03 and choose your next record through archive folio 3. Each later scene names the records to read first. In a nonlinear search, return to that scene after you have examined its records; scene order does not prove a connection.

Let the records carry the proof. The new scenes dramatize the people around these papers. They are fictional narrative, not additional archival exhibits. A character can be mistaken. Names, dates, parents, addresses, source references, and the supplied rules establish the case; sympathy does not.

Make your case. Use archive folios 23-25. Cite exhibit codes and exact fields, test alternatives, and leave unsupported matters open. Everyone investigates; no host, internet, cutting, or outside research is required. Use hints only when needed; open the solution after answering all final questions.

The case includes bereavement, a reported childhood death, and family separation. Apply the invented settlement in K03 and the case bounds in K18.

The royal notice

18 April 1928

Veyrian Legation / dispatch V-228 / signed M. Sorel

Addressee	Mr Daniel Wren, 18 Nettle Street, Elmsreach
Subject	Collateral succession under the Settlement of 1872
Position reported	Second in the present provisional order
Reason for contact	Identification and documentary confirmation
Response deadline	30 April 1928
Official signatory	Marta Sorel, Legation Secretary

The death of Queen Adelise without a surviving descendant brings the collateral remainder into operation. The registered search presently places you second. Your present surname does not by itself defeat a claim. Neither this notice nor an agent's enclosure installs a sovereign.

Please return through the Legation any relevant birth, marriage or family correspondence. You may verify this dispatch independently by its number. Mr Julian Orme is a private representative; his forms are not themselves instruments of the Crown.

Julian Orme & Co. / proposed declaration B

I, Daniel Wren, state that, so far as the records in my possession establish, no child or other descendant of Margaret Wren, born Hale, survives. I authorize Mr Julian Orme to present this statement as evidence that the senior remainder has failed.

I further authorize him to pursue my admission as the next eligible claimant and to receive all correspondence in that matter until the proceedings conclude.

Signature	UNSIGNED

The succession settlement

Settlement: 12 July 1872 / certified extract: 3 April 1928

Veyrian Registry of State / articles 4-9

Article 4. Upon the extinction of the present reigning Deren line, the Crown passes first to the qualifying descendants of Princess Helena Arden, and only after that entire branch is exhausted to the qualifying descendants of her younger brother Prince Otto Arden.

Articles 5-6. Within each branch, the eldest child and that child's descendants precede a younger child and that child's descendants. A deceased ancestor is represented by the ancestor's qualifying descendants. Sex does not alter this order. The younger branch does not move ahead merely because one of its members is older or a generation nearer the root.

Article 7. Marriage neither gives a spouse the other spouse's descent nor extinguishes a descendant's own claim. A change of surname, foster placement or adoption does not extinguish descent for this Settlement. It may require additional identity evidence.

Articles 8-9. Renunciation must be an adult claimant's signed instrument entered in the Registry. It is effective only for the named signer unless an express registered provision says otherwise. An agent's assertion, absence from the country or an unsigned draft is not renunciation.

These are fictional rules, stipulated valid for the game. K18 supplies the checked branch and registry bounds. Do not import the law of a real monarchy.

THE STORY CONTINUES

A life described as a branch

After K03-K09

Daniel knew how strange a familiar name could look in an unfamiliar column. Margaret was his wife. In the papers from Veyr, she was also a point in a line of descent, connected backward through names he had never needed to compare this carefully.

The settlement did not remember their marriage as he did. It needed birth order, parentage, survival, and the way a branch was to be followed. A spouse could stand beside someone through a life without becoming that person's descendant. The distinction was plain in the rule and oddly painful at the table.

"The papers have no feeling for it," he said.

Orme arranged a page squarely against another. "They are intended to bring certainty."

Daniel wondered how often he himself had sounded like that behind a counter. He had not always meant to be unkind. A man could become attached to a procedure because it allowed him to finish a day without carrying every applicant's life home.

He read the names again. A marriage changed one surname. A registered change altered another. Neither entry gave permission to turn the people into strangers merely because a later record called them something else.

Orme asked whether the family information was now sufficient for the declaration.

"Sufficient for which sentence?" Daniel asked.

The question surprised him. Until that morning he had been treating the signature as a single act. The paper contained separate assertions. Each would have to be true, not merely convenient to sign together.

Orme's answer was practiced. He could explain the orderly course the declaration would allow. He was less eager to leave a course open that it might obstruct.

Daniel set the unsigned paper aside. Margaret's family could not be reduced to the part that served his own position. Nor could his father's former surname be treated as the end of a line merely because the name was no longer used at home.

He put two headings on a clean sheet. Two branches. Under each, space for the connections the actual documents could prove.

THE STORY CONTINUES

The notice he believed

After K10-K13

Daniel recognized his own penciled words before he finished reading the notice.

Our Anna. Margaret must be told gently.

He had once thought the difficult part was how to carry the news from a piece of paper to his wife. The handwriting preserved that effort. It did not show him checking whether the paper identified their child.

For a moment the old urgency returned so completely that he wanted to put the notice face down. He could not bear to make the comparison. He could not bear the thought of declining to make it again.

"You were given an account," Orme said.

Daniel looked up. It sounded like absolution offered before he knew what had gone wrong.

"I made it into ours."

That was the part his pencil established. It did not establish who sent the notice to the wrong place, whether anyone intended harm, or what every institution had known.

Those would be tempting stories to build around the shame he now felt. The supplied papers had more limited things to say.

The birth entry, care record, and death registration had fields the notice lacked. Daniel moved them close enough to compare without lifting his eyes far from the table.

He thought of Margaret's illness as something they had lived through, not as permission for an office to stop looking carefully at their child. He also thought of all the forms on which he had once accepted a familiar number before checking the rest of the line.

"No one can be expected to know everything," Orme said.

"No," Daniel answered. "But now I have these."

Hope was frightening enough that he would not name it yet. A mismatch was a reason to investigate, not a promise that every loss would be reversed. Somewhere beyond these pages there might be another record, another name, another person who had built an entire life without his questions in it.

He would not use that possibility to excuse himself. He would not let fear of being mistaken keep him from following it.

The Alder placement papers

4 April 1892 to 18 September 1894

Family placement F-37 / adoption-name entry A-77

Child received alive	Anna Wren
Birth date copied and checked	10 October 1891
Sending reference	Elmsreach Family Home / E-214
Received by	George Alder and Harriet Alder, formerly Reed
Placement reference	F-37 / 4 April 1892
Later name entry	A-77 / 18 September 1894
Name before entry A-77	Anna Wren
Name after entry A-77	Irene Alder

The later order records adoption by George and Harriet Alder. Its application describes the birth parents as untraced. That description does not alter the original E-214 identity or the birth date.

The adoption is stipulated valid in this fictional case. K03 supplies its effect on the Veyrian succession. No general claim about adoption law is intended.

A memorandum from the private office

16 April 1928

Julian Orme & Co. / retained office copy / J-19

To the senior clerk: Secure Mr Wren's declaration before sending him the Alder papers. The school reply has already located the woman. Do not describe the return under A-77 as a living-child finding in correspondence with him.

Our instruction is to advance the younger remainder. A male claimant who has already signed the absence-of-issue statement will be simpler to present. Adoption can be emphasized in the covering argument; do not enclose the full text of article 7 unless the Legation requests it.

Initials	J.O.

Distribution	Office copy; not a Legation instruction

Veyrian Registry and Legation / reply to Daniel Wren / V-241

Dispatch verified	V-228, issued 18 April 1928 by Marta Sorel
Private representative	Julian Orme has no authority to amend the Settlement
Reigning Deren line	Queen Adelise died 2 April 1928; no surviving descendant
Helena line checked	Helena -> Louise -> Celia -> Margaret; ancestors all deceased
Possible continuation	The child recorded in B-308; identity and survival require the supplied chain
Otto line checked	Otto -> Frederick -> Edmund -> Daniel; ancestors deceased
Other qualifying living people	None besides Daniel and the possible B-308 child; no descendants of that child
Registered renunciations relevant here	None
Applicable text	Articles 4-9 as reproduced in K03; no intervening amendment

The completeness and authenticity of this reply are stipulated case facts. It bounds the investigation; the player must still connect the people and apply the rules. It does not supply the missing child's present name.

THE STORY CONTINUES

The convenient version

After K14-K18

By the time Daniel reached the private office memorandum, he had learned to distrust the relief of a quick answer. Even so, the instruction to secure his declaration before the other papers arrived made him feel foolish in a fresh way.

Orme had offered a path on which Daniel could remain the central person. The missing information would have made that path harder to control.

"You wanted me to sign what your own office had reason to question," Daniel said.

Orme began to speak of complications. He spoke as a man who could imagine the work ahead: competing papers, correspondence, an inconvenient person with an independent life. Daniel could understand an administrator preferring one manageable claimant. Understanding made the act more ordinary, not less disturbing.

"You called it helping me."

"I was trying to obtain a clear result."

Daniel looked down at the teacher's reply. A woman had continued living and working while other people considered whether her existence should complicate their arrangements. She was not a blank space waiting to improve his story.

The surviving records had to be linked: birth, care entry, transfer, change of name, marriage, present identity. Then the settlement had to be applied. Daniel could not move someone up the order because he wanted a reunion, any more than Orme could move someone out of it for convenience.

He placed the official correspondence apart from Orme's private papers. "These will go to the legation directly."

He had not yet written the account. He still needed to set it out so another reader could test each connection. That work felt more like responsibility than the title had.

The unused cup caught his eye. He had been imagining what the news could give him: a purpose, a name in a foreign court, perhaps an answer to a grief he had stopped questioning. Now there was another person's right to hear the truth and decide what contact she wanted.

Daniel put the pen beside a clean sheet. The next signature would need to follow an account he could support.

What should Daniel answer?

Summarize here; put supporting details on your working sheets.

1. Is the official notice genuine within the case, and what does it actually authorize?

2. Who ranks first, and how does that person connect to the elder branch? Cite the identity chain.

3. Why does Daniel qualify, and why is he second despite being older than the first heir?

4. What happened to the child in the old notice? Is the proposed declaration supportable?

5. What does the private memorandum establish, what remains uncertain, and what should Daniel do next?

OPTIONAL HELP

Use one hint at a time.

Return to the records as soon as a hint gives you a next step. The original hint levels and exhibit references remain unchanged in this edition.

If a scene has made you certain about somebody, ask which record supports that certainty. Caring about a person, distrusting them, or finding their explanation plausible is not a substitute for a link in the evidence.

The story can leave a motive complicated while the record answers a factual question. You are allowed to reach a firm identification and still disagree about the person involved.

The following pages retain their original hint folios. Read progressively. Keep the separate sealed solution closed until you have committed your answer.

Level 1 / A nudge

Use only as much help as you need. Each page is a stronger level.

The notice. Separate the official dispatch from the private enclosure. A title on stationery does not give both documents the same authority.

The order. Read branch priority before comparing ages. A spouse does not acquire the other spouse's ancestry.

The names. Surnames can change through marriage, a civil entry and adoption. Use the document references to bridge them.

The child. The old notice gives remarkably few identity fields. What does its number omit?

The signature. Revisit the exact words of the declaration after you have followed every child record.

Level 2 / Record pointers

Use only as much help as you need. Each page is a stronger level.

Verify authority. K18 checks the dispatch and the case bounds. K03 controls the order; K02 is unsigned private wording.

Follow both branches. For Helena, compare K04-K06, then K10. For Otto, compare K07-K09.

Check the notice. Compare K10-K13. Then follow the F-37 reference in K11 into K14.

Find the adult. K14 supplies the later name and A-77. K15 uses that exact document and K16 gives the present identity.

Explain the pressure. K17 reveals what the private office intended to withhold. Compare its argument with K03.

Level 3 / Strong help

Use only as much help as you need. Each page is a stronger level.

The identity chain. Anna Wren became Irene Alder under A-77, then Irene Moss through M-77. K16 establishes she is alive in April 1928.

The death mistake. The underlying death is Anna Ward, W-214, with different parents and birthday. The Wren child E-214 is recorded alive and transferred afterward.

The elder branch. Irene descends through Margaret, Celia, Louise and Helena. Daniel descends through Edmund, Frederick and Otto. The entire Helena branch precedes Otto's.

The ending. The first heir is Daniel and Margaret's daughter. Adoption and sex do not exclude her under the printed rules. Daniel's own claim is real but second; he should not sign a statement that the senior branch has no surviving child.

SEALED SOLUTION

Stop here until you commit.

This file reveals the investigation, the identities, and the ending. Keep it separate from the player packet.

Before continuing, write your conclusion, cite the records that support it, and name an uncertainty the file does not resolve.

Read the evidence-cited solution first. The expanded aftermath follows the original ending. It develops the human consequences; it does not supply a clue needed to solve the case.

A blank reverse follows this cover so the first answer starts on a fresh sheet when this file is printed on both sides.

The first heir is not a stranger

Irene Moss is first. Daniel Wren is second. Irene was born Anna Wren on 10 October 1891 to Daniel and Margaret. The daughter he believed dead survives under a name he did not know. Her priority comes through Margaret's elder royal branch, not through her father.

The notice is genuine within the case. K18 independently verifies dispatch V-228 and its signatory. K01 reports a provisional position and asks for records; it does not crown Daniel or make his agent a state official. K02 is a separate unsigned private declaration.

Helena to Margaret. K04 establishes Helena Arden -> Louise Arden/Vale -> Celia Vale. K05 connects Celia by exact birthday, birthplace and parent pair to her marriage with Thomas Hale in Elmsreach. K06 records their daughter Margaret and her marriage to Daniel. K10 records Margaret's daughter Anna.

Anna to Irene. K11 matches Anna's full birth date, parents and address and transfers the living child under E-214 to F-37. K14 preserves that reference and records the later name Irene Alder under A-77. K15 uses A-77 and the same birthday when Irene marries Samuel Moss. K16 verifies Irene Moss alive at the school in April 1928.

The emotional result is supported evidence. These links identify a living daughter of the widower and his deceased wife. Whether she wishes to meet him or accept a crown is not established by genealogy.

Why the younger person comes first

Daniel has his own real claim. K07 traces Otto Arden -> Frederick Arden -> Edmund Arden. K08 joins Edmund Arden to Edmund Wren by date, place and parents. K09 names Edmund as Daniel's father. Daniel does not inherit a bloodline simply by marrying Margaret.

Branch priority precedes age across branches. K03 places every qualifying Helena descendant before the Otto remainder. Irene belongs to Helena's line through her mother; Daniel belongs to Otto's line through his father. His greater age and closer generation do not move the younger branch ahead.

Adoption and sex do not defeat Irene. K03 expressly retains descent after adoption or a name change and gives no preference based on sex. K14 changes Anna's legal family name; it does not erase the birth-parent chain for this fictional Settlement. K18 confirms no relevant registered renunciation.

The royal ancestry belongs to two distant family branches. Daniel and Margaret share remote dynastic ancestry, not a parent or grandparent. The provided generations remain separate until their marriage. Do not merge similarly named people or transfer a spouse's place in the order.

Why this result is bounded. K18 stipulates that the reigning line has ended, that the intervening ancestors are dead, and that there is no other eligible living branch or unprovided amendment. Within those explicit bounds, the traced living child takes first place and Daniel takes second.

The notice, the pressure and the answer

The old death notice was wrongly applied. K12 gives only Anna and 214. K13 identifies the deceased as Anna Ward, W-214, born 3 January 1891 to James Ward and Helen Booth at another address. Anna Wren is E-214, born 10 October 1891 to Daniel and Margaret. K11 and K14 positively record the Wren child alive after the Ward death. The notice explains Daniel's belief; it does not prove his daughter died.

Do not sign declaration B. Its claim that no descendant of Margaret survives conflicts with the identity chain. Daniel should provide the evidence to the Legation directly and request correction/confirmation of the senior claim. He should not give the private office sole control of correspondence while that evidence is withheld.

What the private memorandum proves. K17 directs staff to secure the declaration before disclosing the Alder papers, conceal the living-child finding and omit contrary settlement text. It supports deliberate suppression by that office. It does not prove that the Legation, school or adoptive parents participated.

What remains uncertain. The packet does not identify who originally misaddressed the 1892 notice, whether that old error was deliberate, or why the birth parents were recorded as untraced in the later adoption application. Those questions are distinct from proving Irene's identity and present priority.

Daniel puts the unsigned declaration back in its envelope. On a clean sheet he writes: "Dear Irene. My name is Daniel Wren. I believe I am your father. If you wish it, I would very much like to meet you." He does not begin with Your Majesty.

The closing letter is narrative resolution, not a required clue or a prediction of Irene's response. The case ends with a supported identity, a corrected order and an invitation.

AFTER THE CASE

A letter without a title

After the original solution and ending

Daniel read his letter again before folding it. Dear Irene. He had written that name with more care than any of the titles supplied in the papers from Veyr.

The evidence placed Irene Moss, formerly Irene Alder and born Anna Wren, first through Margaret's senior branch. Daniel remained second through his own paternal line. Wanting to be a father did not determine the succession. Wanting him to be the convenient claimant did not erase a living descendant. Those were conclusions the records and settlement could support.

What Irene might say to him was another kind of question.

He could send the notice he had believed. He could explain his pencil beside it. He could provide the care and identity records so she could test what he claimed rather than trust an unknown man's longing. None of that entitled him to be welcomed.

He almost added that he and Margaret had suffered too. Then he left the sentence out. It was true that grief had shaped their lives. It was not Irene's first duty, on hearing his account, to comfort him for it.

He wrote that she could choose whether they met.

The words felt insufficient, and he let them remain insufficient. A promise to accept her choice would have to be kept later, when there was an actual choice to accept. Writing it could not complete that work in advance.

Beside the letter lay the papers for the legation. Orme's declaration was still unsigned. Daniel had separated what the case proved about the present suppression from what it did not prove about the old mistaken notice and the description of the birth parents as untraced. He would not make an accusation against everyone in an institution merely because one man's later conduct was demonstrably dishonest.

There was satisfaction in that restraint, but no escape from responsibility. His own annotation was still his. Checking now did not mean he had checked then.

He put the second cup back on the shelf that evening. He did not set it aside for Irene. She had a house, a profession, a husband, a life that was not waiting in Margaret's chair. If she came, he could ask what she wanted and take down another cup.

A reply might come. Until it did, Daniel would have to live with the question he was putting in another person's hands. He could supply the evidence, refuse the convenient falsehood, and ask for contact. Whether she wanted to call him Father was hers to decide.
